Robert Herian
Lecturer in Law, The Open University Law School

Robert's current research interests centre on regulation of new technologies within socioeconomic, political and legal contexts. Further research interests involve exploration of links between the law of equity, civil justice, psychoanalysis, literature and language drawing upon critical legal theories, philosophy and more traditional jurisprudence.

Having presented his research at domestic and international conferences, his work has been published in legal and non-legal peer reviewed journals, edited collections, and via online portals including The Conversation and Critical Legal Thinking.
